This course explores the relays between literary culture, modes of timekeeping and temporal orientation, and the construction of colonial and indigenous space in early America. Prompting this survey of early American literatures is the recent “temporal turn” in American Studies—a highly influential strain of scholarship that has its roots in excavations of “deep time” beyond the modern temporal schemes of empire and nationhood, and which has been perhaps most impactful in its re-orientation of 19th-Century Americanist literary studies. Our approach, by contrast, will work both earlier and later, attending to the multiple, non-overlapping modes of time orientation and time discipline in early literatures of encounter prior to its period of standardization in the 19th Century, and later, with the aid of two contemporary novelists who have sought to reimagine the fictional field of early American spatial representation over the last 30 years. Guiding our approach will be a number of key works of contemporary critical scholarship. Why, exactly, are so many early American writers, explorers, and commentators so preoccupied with timekeeping? And why do so many contemporary scholars and writers feel so compelled to return to this particular cultural, social, and technological concern? How might renewed critical attention to the multiple forms of temporal orientation within the literatures of early America lead us to reimagine the spaces of early American encounter? And how might this project lead us to reevaluate the worlds from which the early American novel emerges at the end of the 18th Century?

Course Requirements:

Class Participation (20%): Although I will offer short lectures occasionally to provide historical and cultural context, this is primarily a discussion-based seminar. Your active and ongoing participation in the course is therefore essential to its overall success; all students are encouraged and expected to contribute to class on a daily basis. This requires that you come well-prepared for every class with observations, questions, and comments you have formulated in advance (a practice that will be assisted as a matter of course by the reading journal component; see below); this also means listening attentively to the comments of your fellow seminarians, and engaging their ideas in serious and productive ways. Please be advised that the reading assignments for this class are extensive, and will take you several hours to read; it is your responsibility to have read all assigned materials thoughtfully prior to class, so be sure to budget your time carefully.

Online Reading Journal (20%, graded cumulatively): Each student will be required to post a one-page (roughly 250-300 words) reading journal entry each week under the “Discussion” section of our course Blackboard site. Entries must be posted by 3:00 p.m. every Monday, and should discuss material scheduled for that evening’s discussion. You are expected to offer an entry each week, except for the day on which you are scheduled to make your primary text in-class presentation (i.e., you must still post an entry when you are presenting on the scholarship). Although somewhat informal, these entries are expected to consist of deliberative, thoughtful paragraphs that are free of grammatical error. Use the journal entries to articulate the questions and ideas you develop in the course of your reading, taking care to respond specifically to relevant passages from the text.

Oral Presentations (10%; 10%): Each student will be required to make two 10-15-minute in-class presentations: one that focuses on a topic you deem significant in that week’s assigned primary textual reading; and another (on a different day) on at least one of the secondary texts assigned for discussion. More specific guidelines for each of these presentation types will be provided separately.

Final Paper Project (40%): A seminar paper of 14-16 pages will be due on Wednesday, December 13th. Students are encouraged to develop their topics early; a short prospectus will be due on November 15th.

Attendance: You are expected to attend every session. If you are absent more than twice (for non-medical or emergency reasons), you will either receive a “W” (if prior to the drop deadline of Oct. 29) or an “F” for the course (if after Oct. 29).

Plagiarism: This is a form of academic fraud, and I take it very seriously. You will not receive credit for any work that has been plagiarized; moreover, any work suspected of plagiarism will be forwarded, as a matter of official University Policy, to the Office of the Dean of Students for adjudication. The consequences of plagiarism can be very serious, resulting in reduced course grades, course failures, and sometimes in academic suspension. I understand, though, that citing sources properly can be confusing at times; if you’re ever in doubt, just ask me.

COVID Protocols: As you likely know already, due to sharply increased incidence of the Delta Variant locally and across the state the El Paso Health Authority issued a city-wide indoor masking mandate that went into effect on August 18th, a move that was affirmed by votes on both the City Council and the EPISD Board. However, because UTEP is an agency of the State of Texas, we cannot mandate that you wear masks on campus. But out of concern for my family and yours, I do strongly and warmly encourage you to get vaccinated and wear a mask during class, and to observe the best practices recommended by the CDC. If you are exposed to someone with COVID, please get tested; if you develop symptoms, please stay at home, get tested, and let me know via email. I promise to do what I can to keep you up to date with our course via Zoom; absences for reason of voluntary quarantine following CDC guidelines will be fully excused.
